This island is perhaps, naturally, the richest island in the world. It is six hundred miles long, with an average width of about two bundred miles. It is ten times larger than Hawaii. It is about the size of Cuba, and has now about seventeen millions of inhabitants. At the time of this story its population was about two millions of souls, of Jacatra, on the island of Java. The site of this ancient city is situated near by that of the was absent from his dominions with a large war fleet, carrying on a war of piracy against the Malays of Malacca and of Northern Sumatra. Laksamana resolved to feign that his fleet was that of Browijoyo returning home. He ordered the banner of Java, which represented a turtle on a yellow ground, to be run up to the mamtop of each one of his war prahus. At the sight of these banners there arose shouts of rejoicing along the shore. The people from inland thronged to the beach. And soon a multitude of sasopans, or canoes, crowded with people, and many tambangaus, or stately barges, filled with nobles and chiefs, came off to welcome, as they supposed, their returning King Now Laksamana had ordered the Javan slaves on board to be dressed like Malay sailors and officers, and he compelled them under threat of death to bail their countrymen in their own language; so that multitudes of Javans, of nobles and people, had clambered up the sides of the prahus and got on board before they discovered they were in the hands of enemies. Among the foremost of the radens, or princes of the island, was Lanang Besar, the

The men of this Prince, as they approached the great war prahu of Laksamana, which, appearing strange to them, they supposed to be one that their great King Browijoyo had captured from the Malays, cried out: "Hail to Browijoyo, the King of Kings! He comes laden with the spoil of the great islands! His fleet is laden with the slaves, and diamonds, and gold of Pontianak and of Malacca!" orders to seize the great barge of the Prince of hero Laksamana, whose mighty name had already reached the island of Java.

Now the object of Laksamana in coming to Java was not invasion, or elaughter, or plunder; Therefore he spake kindly to Lanang Besar, and said to him that he desired to be his friend; and

The Prince of Jacatra was now released in order to return on shore and to his people; but before going he had left in the charge of Laksamana his two sons, the Princes Paku Buwono and Paku Bumi, and also several of the young nobles of Jacatra, as hostages for the faithful performance of his obligations with Laksamana.

When the Prince of Jacatra returned to his city he called together his nobles and people, and after speaking of the mighty hero of Menangkabau, and expressing his belief that the gods were with him and took care of him, he gave orders to levy an army of twe tv thousand men, H. Smith, Conservative, proposed an amend with which he marched to Cheribon, a town on ment, supported by Stanley Criss, for recording the sea coast, where again he met Laksamana and a protest against the cloture in the journal of his fleet of war prahus. And at this point Laksamana landed with five thousand warriors, and the allied force gave battle to an army coming from Surakarta, the capital city of the Empire of Browijovo. As usual the mighty personal prowess and generalship of Laksamana gained the day, and the general of the army of Browiabout this time Browijoyo was returning to use dominions. The great pirate of Java approached the municipal law came into operation, taking the place of martial law, and Arabi was, therethe harbor of Cheribou. He hoisted his banners and signals to indicate that he was returning in triumph laden with plunder. As Browijoyo en-tered the harbor he beheld a fleet out at sea bearing down upon him. He presumed that this ON HAND AND FOR SALE. must be of course a fleet of Javan war practise equipped by some of his nobles, and sent out to assist him. The King observed with satisfaction the multitude of great barges and prahus coming from the shore crowded with people, and anticipated a grand and triumphant welcome home.
